Once upon a time, there was a sweet girl named Little Red Riding Hood. One day, her mother asked her to take a basket of treats to her grandmother, who was ill. Her mother warned her to be very careful and not to talk to strangers.

On her way through the dense forest, the girl met a wolf who seemed friendly. He asked her where she was going, and the girl, forgetting her mother’s advice, told him all about her grandmother’s house and the longer path she intended to take.

The cunning wolf suggested that she pick some flowers for her grandmother, which bought him time to dash along a shortcut. While Little Red Riding Hood was distracted in the forest, the hungry animal raced toward the old woman’s house, ready to strike.

Upon arriving at the cottage, the wolf knocked on the door, mimicking the granddaughter’s voice. The grandmother let him in, and the beast swallowed her whole in the blink of an eye. The villain then put on the old woman’s clothes and lay down in bed to wait for the girl.

A short while later, Little Red Riding Hood arrived and thought her grandmother looked very different. Finding the old woman’s appearance strange, she asked about her large ears, enormous eyes, and long hands—receiving highly suspicious answers from the disguised wolf.

When the girl asked why her mouth was so big, the wolf roared that it was to eat her better! He sprang from the bed and swallowed poor Little Red Riding Hood in one gulp, then lay back, satisfied, and began to snore loudly.

A huntsman passing near the house heard the thunderous snores and decided to investigate. Looking through the window, he saw the wolf fast asleep in the bed with an enormous belly, and he immediately realized the terrible tragedy that had taken place.

The huntsman cut open the monster’s belly and rescued Little Red Riding Hood and her grandmother, who emerged unharmed. They filled the wolf’s belly with stones, and he fled, never to return. The girl learned her lesson and promised to always obey her mother.
