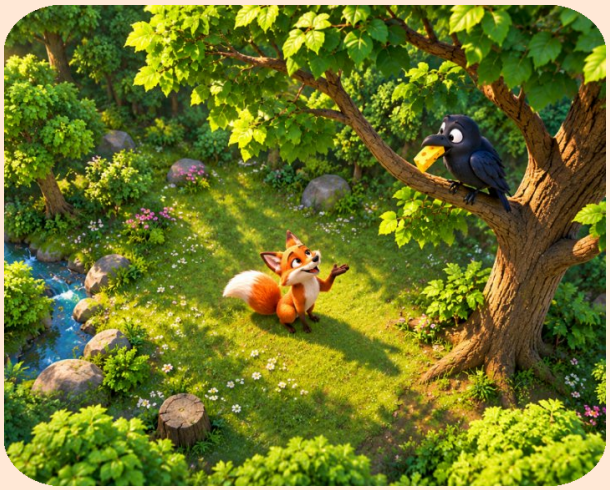
One morning, a crow found a large piece of cheese. Overjoyed, he flew up to a tree branch to enjoy his snack in peace, away from the other animals.

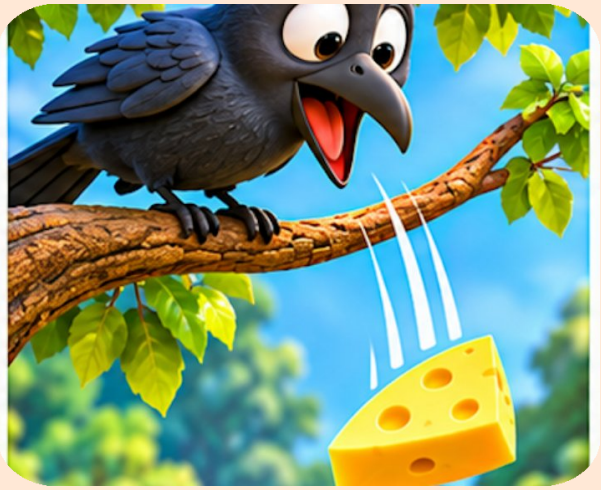


A fox was wandering through the forest when he caught the scent of the cheese. He looked up and saw the crow on the branch. With his mouth watering, he began to devise a plan to get his paws on that tasty treat.

The fox smiled and said, "Good morning, beautiful crow! Your feathers are so shiny! You are the most elegant bird in this entire forest!" The crow felt proud and held his head high.

Noticing the crow’s vanity, the fox continued, "With such beauty, your voice must be wonderful, too! Please, sing a song for me!" The crow was delighted by all the praise.

Eager to show off his beautiful voice, the crow opened his beak and let out a loud "CAW!". At that very instant, the cheese slipped out and fell from the tree. The fox rushed to grab it!



The fox snatched up the cheese and took a big bite. Then, looking at the crow, he said, "You may be handsome, but you need to learn not to believe every compliment you hear!"

The crow was sad to have lost his cheese, but he learned an important lesson: not every compliment is sincere. From that day on, he decided to be more careful and not let himself be carried away by vanity.
